Memoria viva: aqui no se rinde nadie (nobody gives up here) digital exhibition

Guide:

1. Digital exhibition link
2. Audio clip transcripts
3. Consent form

—

1. DIGITAL EXHIBITION LINK

Link to the digital exhibition website:

https://sites.google.com/view/memoria-viva-francoist-resista/home

Please email elenacameroh@gmail.com if there are any issues accessing the file

Thank you
Yours in solidarity
Elena

2. AUDIO CLIPS TRANSCRIPTS

Can also provide Spanish (original) transcripts upon request. Both are attached to the digital exhibition as resources / for accessibility.

AGENCY AND THE MEMORY OF SMALL THINGS

Everything, everything that has been hidden, and everything that continues to be hidden.

Even though fortunately, after 26 years, many people now know about the mass graves, they don't know why those people were there, who put them there.

That, for example, is what it means to have a memory, a proper memory.

To explain why those people ended up there, who did this to them, and why it has been kept hidden for so many years.

And it's the same with us.

"Why were we arrested?"

We were arrested because we wanted to put an end to a dictatorship.

"What was a dictatorship?"

Young people ask me this. At least, they always say to me, "But how did you fight?"

Because, of course, they have a concept of… "What is a dictatorship? What is it based on?"

So you have to explain to them that a dictatorship isn't just that they would shoot you.

It's that they wouldn't even let you walk on the grass, which is something I always tell because it used to drive me crazy, why shouldn't I be able to walk on the grass?

That kind of subtle repression, which seeps into, and seeped into, the whole of society.

And, of course, the whole issue of what we women, the girls, the young people, went through.

You reached adolescence and you had to learn ways of defending yourself against everything.

If you went on the Metro or on a bus, you had to know how to defend yourself.

We had techniques that we passed on to one another.

"Put your elbows together like this, then you do this…"

A friend's mother used to carry a pin, and when someone came too close to her, she would give him a, a jab with the pin!

Those kinds of things that we have normalized and naturalized, and we don't think of as being part of memory, but they are part of memory.

A documentary came out recently about the women who decided to play football, and the beating they were given.

Well, those are the kinds of things that… That brings it down to earth.

You're not talking about the great heroes and heroines, with the flag, "oooh, oooh."

No, you bring it down to earth, to earth. Which is where you need to be. For people to understand it.

So that is the memory we are building, the memory of the small things.

Because that's how they take it in, they consider it their own.

You can't tell them, "Look, to fight against a dictatorship, you have to stand there and let yourself be arrested and tortured…"

No, because they did that to us against our will.

We did not choose that.

We chose the other part. This was a consequence, but we did not choose it.

That's why I always say, "I went to the DGS because they forced me."

I don't know if I told you this.

When the military judge came to the DGS (General Directorate of Security) to take my statement, and then he left, the captain stayed behind, who was the one acting as the secretary.

He must have been doing his military service.

He had this terrified look on his face…

Then the captain said to me, "We're here because we're being forced to."

And I said, "Me too! Why do you think I'm here?"

[Laughs]

It's a bit like that.

Not to downplay the issue of repression, no. But yes to put it in the context that this is the way those in power try to stop struggles: repression.

But it feeds back into itself.

When there is a lot of struggle, there is a lot of repression (...)

Giving them examples of what was done at that time, how we made the posters, how we put them up, how we transported the propaganda, where we hid it, and how we fought back.

And how we faced the imposed prohibitions. Because throughout the whole of human history, youth have always confronted prohibitions, because that's normal.

.How we didn't respect the rules that were imposed on us and looked for loopholes, as young people, because that's what young people normally do.

DIGNITY

We hold/uphold on to that dignity, no matter what

What does that mean, to hold on to your dignity no matter what?

It means that we have/carry the pride of all the people who came before us

They had to have courage to go with a shotgun and confront such an army, they had to have courage to have fought in the villages, and to have "stood out" and to have defended what they believed in and paid for it. Paid dearly.

They must have had to have courage. And they did (...) and they were murdered and they had the dignity to die, many of them with their fists held high.

3.07.20 And we're the generations that inherited'/received all of that.

And that we also decided that this dictatorship had to end already

That we did not want to go on living like that.

So we are the recipients of their dignity

And also, continue that dignity forward in our struggle, both during the dictatorship and afterwards during the transition.

So yes, our dignity is safe and we want to pass it on to the next generation—

(...) Everywhere you look there are analyses -what's going to happen, what's not going to happen, this, that…

But what we are missing is someone who says: well, this is what we have to do.

Yes, fine. We are already clear that there are super-rich people, super-rich, who this time are accumulating more money and more of everything,

But "and"/so what? Then what?

We are missing this "and."

That "and" is what we think matters, and we put in it dignity as important

The dignity of everything we've been recipients of/inherited, the dignity of everything we have to pass on to the next generations that come after us. You must not give up. Because you must not give up.

3.08.50 I wish you could give up, but we simply cannot *(why do you say that you cannot give up)...(you cannot give up because after spending your whole life always on the side of the struggle, knowing that you have to fight to achieve the bare minimum, how are you going to give up now? It makes no sense. So, what you have ahead of you, you just keep going (...)

3.09.26 If we do not achieve it, others will. (...) Because the people they murdered after the war died knowing that there'd be others who would carry their ideas forward.

Most of them wrote it in their letters

The one from the process of 27 September 1975

(letter says) 'They're going to kill us, but there will be others who will fight'

And that… I, no I…

I got out of,

I survived,

I've got that task that they set (...)

They entrusted it to us:

'They're going to kill me, but there'll be others who'll keep fighting'

So that's it.

This is a task that we have carried from generation to generation throughout all of history (...) you know that there are better periods and worse periods, that history is not linear, but in the worst periods is when you have to maintain hope the most, and this is the one that has fallen to us.

FEAR

It is an ancestral fear, it is that trauma that has been passed down from generation to generation, which is very powerful.

Which surprises me because I come from a family that did not give fear wings, despite the fact that they went through it.

My grandfather is one of the disappeared, my uncle (...) I come from a family that has lost, but they did not pass that fear on to us, and I have always downplayed it, but I have learned (through memory work/activism) that it's like a weight pressing down on us. And it's tied to impunity.

Because really if nobody is put on trial, all those people - those shameless ones, murderers, rapists (...) it was brutal.

All of that, if nobody has paid for any of it, if nobody has ever been put on trial

So how do you confront them? They are very powerful, they tell you.

Indeed, I have learned that. I've learned that the only way we can overcome that fear is if we manage -somehow- to put even one of the perpetrators on trial and bring them to justice, which is why we have to insist.

That ongoing fear you're talking about passed from generation to generation - how do you keep it in mind when talking to younger generations? How do you interrupt that cycle of fear when you give talks in high schools?

Because I put much more emphasis on what we did, not so much on what we suffered.

Okay, they detained us, okay, yes.

But what did we do, and how did we overcome that fear?

Because we were frightened. Very, very, very frightened.

But we had to overcome it.

So that is always what I transmit to them.

It is normal to be afraid, I mean, it is a defence mechanism, a basic instinct, but we have to take into account that it can be overcome, controlled, or directed in a way that does not prevent you from moving, from responding.

So that is always what I transmit to them:

if I, who was just a little 16- or 17-year-old girl, had the capacity to do these things that seem so extraordinary to them, even though they weren't…

If I could do it, I had the capacity/was capable, why wouldn't they have it?

Because they are just the same (as us).

I said to one of the girls from the school the other day, you are valuable, you are necessary, that is why we come to tell you [these things], because you are valuable and necessary. And you are capable.

Because it is true, if they do not do it, who is going to do it?

We are in a phase of decreasing, which is why we address young people.

Not only to share our testimony, but to pass on why our struggle is necessary, why it matters.

So that they adapt it to whatever they consider relevant, make it their own, in whatever way they think is right.

(...) The first thing is to understand what fear is;

You have to understand fear and not demonize it.

You're not a coward because you're afraid, you're a rational human being.

The important thing is that you have to muster up strength

-which you have, it's there- to combat that fear.

And having the trust and trusting that you, in effect, have that strength

And knowing that the fellow activist beside you will be there for you.

Power always does the same thing, well, so do we — which is to fight.

THE MANY PATHS TO MEMORY

But because the Argentine lawsuit is being boycotted at the state level, the State Prosecutor General's Office gave the order not to cooperate with Judge Servini, and the case was effectively stalled.

So we decided that we should bring the cases here (to Spain).

Because why not bring them within the Spanish state? Some people thought that if we filed lawsuits here in Spain, the Argentine case would be stopped. That hasn't happened.

And there were also people saying, why even bother doing it here when we already know what the judiciary is like here?

But that didn't go like that, because one of the things we did achieve—and it was a success—was that everyone came to know that there were torturers and that they were still alive, like González Pacheco, Billy the Kid, and El Muñecas, Captain Muñecas, because he was a captain in the Guardia Civil.

So that alone was already a tremendous success. When you ask people, Billy el Nino comes out.

Even in the Congress of Deputies—and this was Pablo Iglesias—he said, "the torturer Billy the Kid." The torturer.

He was already being referred to as a torturer without ever having been tried, but only because of our testimonies.

That had never happened before (their activism).

This hadn't happened before even when we put the lawsuit for the Argentinian Lawsuit —well, it's true that we had to bring the lawsuit here again; it wasn't easy for any of us, we had to remember, and to go through that process, of remembering the events, again—but it was a success.

Not a single lawsuit against Billy the Kid was admitted, not one. But now everyone knew who he was, everyone. And given our possibilities, the truth is I consider it a tremendous success.

We continued with other torturers in Asturias and elsewhere. It served to make people aware that people were still being tortured at the end of Francoism and even after Franco's death.

Those were the people who were fighting against the dictatorship. They were the ones who achieved democracy, not the King. That was a very important step.

It’s true that you sometimes say, “What’s the point of going through everything you have to go through, only for them to tell you that they won’t admit the lawsuit?”

But that’s what political struggle is like. If we had it easy, that’s how it is, otherwise we wouldn’t be where we are

CONSENTIMIENTO PARA EL USO Y LA PUBLICACIÓN EN LÍNEA DE EXTRACTOS DE UNA ENTREVISTA DE HISTORIA ORAL

Finalidad de este formulario de consentimiento

Este formulario explica cómo se utilizarán determinados extractos de una entrevista de historia oral realizada previamente contigo, Rosa María García Alcón, como parte de Who Owns Memory?, un proyecto participativo de historia pública y una exposición digital.

El objeto de este formulario no es una nueva entrevista, sino la entrevista realizada junto con Elena Hernandez Camero como parte del colectivo de historia oral Mayflies, para su colección 'Winging It!', sobre activismo DIY desde 2008. Este formulario se refiere al uso adicional de extractos de esa entrevista ya existente en la exposición digital de Who Owns Memory?.

Al firmar este formulario, das tu consentimiento informado para el uso específico que se describe a continuación.

Who Owns Memory?

Who Owns Memory? es un proyecto participativo de historia pública que explora cómo las sociedades democráticas recuerdan, olvidan, interpretan y negocian pasados difíciles en la era digital.

A través de talleres, investigación colaborativa y narrativas digitales, las personas participantes trabajan con testimonios orales, documentos de archivo, fotografías y narrativas históricas locales. El proyecto plantea preguntas sobre qué historias pasan a formar parte de la historia pública, qué experiencias quedan desatendidas y cómo se crea, interpreta y comunica el conocimiento histórico en la vida pública contemporánea.

El proyecto está financiado por la EVZ Foundation (Stiftung Erinnerung, Verantwortung und Zukunft) como parte del programa Histoday 2026: "No Time to Forget. For Democracy, Facts and Dignity." La participacion en el programa y el desarrollo del proyecto de historia pública se realizan de forma voluntaria y no remunerada. Elena Hernandez Camero no recibe un pago ni una remuneración por la realización de este proyecto ni por la producción de esta exposición.

La exposición digital Who Owns Memory? reunirá los proyectos desarrollados por las personas participantes en el programa. Este proyecto se presentará junto con otros proyectos y contribuciones desarrollados por otros participantes del programa.

Uso de tu entrevista

La entrevista contigo, Rosa María García Alcón, fue realizada originalmente el 24 de junio de 2026 como parte del proyecto de historia oral de Mayflies y de la colección Winging It!, sobre activismo DIY desde 2008.

Para Who Owns Memory? Elena Hernandez Camero seleccionará y editará aproximadamente cuatro extractos breves de esta entrevista. La exposición se centra en tus reflexiones sobre el trabajo de memoria: las decisiones, prácticas y valores implicados en la reconstrucción y transmisión de memorias, y en el activismo por la memoria y la justicia en relación con el franquismo.

Los extractos seleccionados se presentarán como parte de una exposición digital que explora la siguiente pregunta:

¿Qué guía la reconstrucción y transmisión de las memorias?

Los extractos seleccionados podrán:

- editarse en cuanto a duración y claridad, manteniendo el significado de tus palabras;
- presentarse como grabaciones de audio;
- subtitularse y traducirse al inglés;
- acompañarse de breves textos contextuales e interpretativos escritos por Elena Hernandez Camero;
- acompañarse de una breve biografía;
- publicarse en línea como parte de la exposición digital Who Owns Memory?.

A qué doy mi consentimiento

Al firmar a continuación, confirmo que comprendo y doy mi consentimiento para los siguientes usos de mi entrevista:

☐ Doy mi consentimiento para que determinados extractos de mi entrevista de historia oral ya existente sean editados y publicados como parte de la exposición digital Who Owns Memory?.

☐ Doy mi consentimiento para que mi voz sea publicada online como parte de los extractos de audio seleccionados.

☐ Doy mi consentimiento para que mi nombre aparezca junto a los extractos seleccionados.

☐ Doy mi consentimiento para que se publique junto a los extractos seleccionados una breve biografía sobre mí, con el fin de proporcionar contexto sobre quién soy y mi activismo.

☐ Doy mi consentimiento para que los extractos seleccionados sean subtitulados en inglés.

☐ Entiendo que la exposición será accesible públicamente online y que, por tanto, los materiales seleccionados podrán ser consultados por cualquier persona.

☐ Entiendo que los extractos seleccionados podrán presentarse junto a materiales contextuales o interpretativos escritos por la autora del proyecto.

☐ Entiendo que el proyecto no presentará mis reflexiones como respuestas autorizadas o definitivas sobre la memoria, sino como mi propia perspectiva y experiencia del trabajo de memoria y justicia.

Retirada del consentimiento

Entiendo que puedo retirar mi consentimiento para este uso específico poniéndome en contacto con Elena Hernández Camero.

Confirmo que:

- He leído y comprendido este formulario de consentimiento.
- He tenido la oportunidad de realizar preguntas sobre cómo se utilizará mi entrevista.
- Entiendo que determinados extractos de mi entrevista existente se publicarán en línea como parte de la exposición digital Who Owns Memory?.
- Entiendo que mi voz y, si así lo he autorizado anteriormente, mi nombre y una breve biografía aparecerán públicamente asociados al material.

Doy mi consentimiento libremente.

Nombre:
Rosa María García Alcón

Firma:

GARCIA ALCON ROSA MARIA - 01807904N

Firmado digitalmente por GARCIA ALCON ROSA MARIA - 01807904N
Fecha: 2026.10.02 16:19:38 +02'00'

Fecha:
02/10/2026

Nombre de la entrevistadora/autora del proyecto:
Elena Hernandez Camero

Firma:
.....

Fecha: 03.10.2026
.....